Summary:

Part of a holistic education involves teaching students to be socially adept individuals who can effectively blend into society. It is thus imperative to prevent problem behaviours at all levels in schools. In this valuable book, Bob Algozzine et al provide teachers with helpful ways to teach social skills instruction, conflict resolution, peer mediation and bullying prevention. With reference to community partnerships and culturally responsive teaching, the authors use real life case studies to emphasise that early response to behavioural problems tends to lead to better outcomes for the student concerned.
