Summary:

The clear, easy-to-use units in Architexture encourage students to develop their own natural curiosities and learn about their world and its history by taking a look at six ground-breaking forms of architecture: caves, pyramids, temples, castles, houses and skyscrapers. Suitable for the middle years, this book encourages students to investigate the social, geographic, economic and cultural influences on the development of architecture, leading them to become more aware of the forces that have shaped the world they live in today.

Each unit contains a brief introduction to a form of architecture as well as a vocabulary list, KWL charts, foundations questions to get students thinking, assignments and reflection suggestions. Get students thinking with Architexture: Architecture in Context!

Key selling points:

- Contains building assignments that allow students to expand upon their knowledge.
- Includes 'finishing touches' that encourage students to employ higher-order thinking skills.
- Contains a helpful glossary at the back of the book to assist students in their understanding of specific architectural terms.
