Summary:

The three main sections cover:

- The discussion of issues and practices to give parents and carers information, and to assist understanding.
- Advice for all curriculum areas about places to go, resources to use, activities to do, websites to visit and how to provide beneficial support.
- The question, 'what makes a novel suitable reading for able and talented children?' is examined. There is a detailed and lengthy list of recommended authors and titles, with comments and explanation as to their inclusion.

The guide is very useful for schools and teachers too!

- Issues are looked at from the view of parents and carers so that appropriate advice can be given and home-school partnerships strengthened, as stressed by government initiatives.
- Extensive advice is given on subject provision and suitable fiction for able and talented children.

Key selling points:

- Identifies able and talented children and gives different examples of how best to work with them.
- Aimed at parents and carers and suggests different ways of getting advice and help.
- The book is part of the Effective Provision series.
- Key questions, important messages and action points are coded throughout the book.
- The book is broken down into subject areas so the parent or carer can encourage children to excel at topics they are good at and provide more help in other areas.
