Summary:

The purpose of Leading the Learning School is to provide a practical guide to effective school management based on up-to-date knowledge about learning. The book consists of four sections that deal with:

- Learning: 13 key principles of learning are derived from a survey of up-to-date knowledge of the brain and learning.
- Teaching: how to use the key principles of learning to improve teachers' professional knowledge and skills, make the learning environment more supportive and improve the design of learning activities.
- Staff development: how the same principles that should underpin the design and teaching of learning activities for students should underpin the design and provision of development activities for teachers.
- Organisational development: how a learning school should be consciously managed according to these same key principles of learning.

Key selling points:

- Broken into four sections it is concise and easy to read.
- Incorporates brain-based learning.
- Provides illustrated examples and visual diagrams that are simple and easy to use.
- Draws on extensive and varied research.
