

Chapter 1

It was cold, and the wind howled through the marram grass on the sand dunes.

Carried by the wind, thousands of shining grains of sand whipped along the dunes, just above the surface.

The surf was feeling the wind too. It was white-tipped and tall.

A fine spray of water flew off the tops of the waves.

A few lonely seagulls huddled on the beach.

The beach itself was empty of people.

She was happy with the way she'd been riding the waves.

"Here," she said, handing Hayden her board.

"Have a go!"

"Thanks!" said Hayden. "What's it like out there?"

"Great!" Kaylee replied. "Almost perfect."

"I was just thinking," said Hayden, changing the subject,

"I'm going to make my new board. I'm going to call it 'Shoot the Gap'!"

"That's great!" said Kaylee, very impressed.

"Do you want to help?" asked Hayden.
