Summary

In How to Coach Leadership in a PLC, author Marc Johnson details the importance of leadership in successful PLC implementation and provides ways to expand readers' abilities to lead at all levels. Johnson guides educators to become leaders of learning and to build leadership capacity among their collaborative teams. If educators remain devoted to a collaborative school culture, believe in their students and share a clear identity, they can improve results in their district.

F–12 school and district administrators will

- consider leadership actions that can buttress capacity building in PLCs
- discover the big ideas and foundational questions that frame districtwide PLC work and the leadership tasks it entails
- learn how to sustain PLCs by creating opportunities to lead
- gain skills to refine PLC leadership roles at the district, school and collaborative team levels.
