Ban the Book Report
Promoting Frequent and Enthusiastic Reading

Graham Foster
Contents

Introduction: Powerful Alternatives to Book Reports 5

The More Reading, the Better 7

1. Meaning that Includes Personal Significance 8
   Conferences and Surveys 9
   School Library Collections 10
   Oral Reading and Book Talks 10
   Reading Targets and Contests 11
   Timed Reading Records 12
   Celebrations of Reading 12
   Using Rubrics and Exemplars 13

Motivational Reading-Response Assignments 17

2. Reading Log Assignments 18
   Reading Log Prompts 19
   Reading Log Prompts Focusing on Conflict 22
   Reading Log at Key Points During Reading 25

3. Oral Response Assignments 28
   Book Talk for Fiction 29
   Oral Reading of My Favorite Part of the Book 32
   Reading Surprises 35
   Talk-Show Interview 39

4. Written Response Assignments 44
   Newspaper Headline and Article 45
   Diary Entry for a Character 48
   Revised Ending or Sequel Chapter 51
   Letter to the Author 55
   Eulogy for a Major Character 58

5. Illustration and Graphic Representation Assignments 61
   Alternate Cover for My Book 62
   Five-Point Recap 65
   Map or Timeline for My Book 71
   Picturing Textual Details 74

6. Assignments to Make Connections 77
   Personal Connections 78
   Connecting My Book to Other Texts 81
   Predictions and Questions as I Read 85

7. Response to Informational Text 88
   Interesting Features of an Informational Book 89
The More Reading, the Better

Teachers recognize the benefits of frequent independent reading by students—increased knowledge on a range of topics, enhanced vocabulary, and improved reading comprehension. Instead of narrow and analytical book reports, response assignments should be more closely aligned with the reasons that people read voluntarily: exploring personal interests, making important emotional connections, and enjoying themselves. Teachers who value showing as well as telling expectations appreciate resources that illustrate motivated reading responses and powerful personal connections to one's reading.

Chapter 1: Meaning that Includes Personal Significance

Conferences and Surveys
School Library Collections
Oral Reading and Book Talks
Reading Targets and Contests
Timed Reading Records
Celebrations of Reading
Using Rubrics and Exemplars
Reading research has long emphasized the importance of frequent independent reading by students, not only for reading comprehension but also for enrichment of students’ lives. For years we have recognized that without encouragement many young people would not voluntarily read longer texts, such as novels. The digital age intensifies the challenge, since online reading is often characterized by skimming, scanning, and shuffling around multiple texts rather than extended reflective reading of longer texts. Despite the challenges, educators must clearly and enthusiastically advocate frequent independent reading. The independent reading habit is a gift that yields lifetime enjoyment and opportunity.

Teachers and parents should remember frequent independent reading leads to writing. Published writers frequently report that their reading led them to their writing and that without their reading habit they never would have become writers. Even if one’s writing is never published or even shared with others, it represents a highly significant form of personal exploration and self-understanding.

To encourage students to read frequently and independently, stress the following program features:

- Students enjoy access to a wide collection of reading materials in classroom and school libraries.
- Students have the opportunity to hear books read aloud.
- Students spend class time reading self-selected texts.
- Students talk about and write about their personal and emotional responses.

Critical analysis or personal response—which is more likely to motivate lifelong reading? Since book reports are impersonal and analytical, rather than personal and reflective, offer your students response options other than book reports for independent reading.

The meaning readers create when they read extends beyond thematic meaning, and effective response options recognize this. Of course, readers interpret the themes presented in texts. These themes often confirm or challenge beliefs, and usefully do so. However, meaning also includes emotional understandings and reflection on the readers’ personal experiences. When a reader reports being unable to stop reading the book, the reader has emotionally connected to the text. Thinking about why a book is so emotionally appealing represents a truly valuable and motivational exploration of meaning.

Finally, when readers connect the experiences presented in text to their own experiences, when they compare fictional characters, conflicts, motivations, and settings to their own lives or to characters, conflicts, motivations, and settings encountered in other fiction, they engage in a personally meaningful and academically significant exploration. When they compare information, observations, and interpretations presented in nonfiction to their own current understanding, based on personal experience and reading of other texts, once again, readers are engaging in meaningful learning. Response to independent reading must value meaning-making that includes emotional response and personal connections as well as thematic meaning and stylistic analysis.

Conferences and Surveys

In conferences with students, especially students who claim not to enjoy reading, teachers and librarians can usefully invite students to identify subjects of interest—football, hockey, cars, horses, magazines, movies, and so on. Librarians provide invaluable help in matching reluctant readers with texts linked to their current personal interests. In recommending texts based on current interest, we can encourage students to extend their reading tastes over time. In helping students select texts with an appropriate level of difficulty, we can nudge students toward more challenging and more literary texts as their reading abilities develop. With guidance, a reader can be led by a favorite author, topic, or genre to similar and possibly more challenging books.

Matching students with personally significant and motivational books becomes a major focus as teachers encourage frequent independent reading. When students claim to dislike reading, respond that they just haven’t yet discovered the right book and that the right book awaits discovery by every reader. Work from the conviction that there are interesting books for every student, books that motivate personal involvement and lifelong reading, books that lead readers enthusiastically to recommend titles to other students.

Reading profiles or surveys represent one strategy to guide students in their choices of books for independent reading. Consider using surveys like those on pages 15 and 16 in a class discussion about favorite reading. Have students revisit the survey throughout the school year, so they can note changes in their reading preferences.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>My Current Reading for Pleasure Survey</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>NAME: Chris Lopez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DATE: April 25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I like books that are fictional, romantic and funny.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I am likely to reread material that is written by my favorite author or that is fun to read.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I dislike books that are always talking about tragic events.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>My favorite place for reading is in my room.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I would like to read more about fictional, romance books.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I would describe the amount of reading that I do as a hobby; an enjoyment.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I am likely to finish a book that has a great plot.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I am unlikely to finish a book that always talks about bad, depressing stuff.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>For the next month, my personal reading goal is to re-read the Twilight Series of Stephanie Meyer and try out other books.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Boys often prefer practical how-to and informational texts.
My Current Reading Profile

NAME: Ann Shaefer
DATE: September 12

The first part I look at in a novel is the front picture. I like to read novels that look at something scary or surprising. One thing that “puts me off” reading a novel is when the author says the same thing over and over again. I usually read a novel in about one day (days, weeks). My favorite authors are Peg Kehret. When I describe myself as a reader, I usually use phrases such as fast, good. My good reading habits are I read fast and can summarize a book. Reading habits I would like to change are to stop reading a book in one day or less. My personal reading goals for this term (week/month) are to read something different than chick-flicks and scary books.

School Library Collections

School library collections strongly influence the viability of independent reading effort. Teachers and librarians must constantly monitor and update classroom and school library holdings, paying particular attention to authors, titles, and subjects that appeal to students. Collections should include graphic novels, texts at a range of reading levels, a range of informational texts, fiction and poetry, and audio books.

Recorded reading or audio books allow students to enjoy texts beyond their reading level. It is critical that students follow the print as the text is read so that they learn print forms of oral language. In some independent reading programs, volunteers record readings of texts or serve as reading buddies; i.e., partners who read the book with the students.

See page 106 for titles that can assist you in maintaining current library sources.

Oral Reading and Book Talks

Encourage frequent independent reading by regularly sharing your own competent and enthusiastic reading of appealing texts in a variety of literary forms. When students present a competent oral reading of a favorite part of a text, it can motivate other students to read the book.

Follow these guidelines to improve your oral reading of texts. Encourage students to apply these techniques when they engage in oral reading.

- Respect Punctuation Cues: Many readers pause unnaturally in oral reading. Unnatural pauses impair a listener’s comprehension of an oral reading. Remember that a comma signals a pause; a period signals a stop. An exclamation mark signals emotion; a question mark signals an inquisitive tone, and, in some cases, a tone of disbelief or anger.
- Use Timing and Pacing: Decide how quickly the text will be read and where changes in pace are appropriate.
- Vary Volume: Different texts require different volume and changes in volume.
• Use Emphasis: Remember that an effective oral reading always moves to a focal point. Choose the point of emphasis. Signal it with a slight pause and a deliberate emphasis of key words.

Good Bits conferences represent another possibility to encourage students to read extensively. A good bit is a part of a text that the reader finds interesting, enjoyable, memorable, or personally important. Following your modeling of a Good Bit conference, students take turns sharing good bits with the entire class or a group of classmates. Provide them with these guidelines:

• Provide a little background about the text and why you chose it.
• Read the good bit as effectively as you can.
• Tell why you like the good bit, why it is enjoyable for you.
• Invite questions and reactions from others.

Reading Targets and Contests

A school's independent reading program sometimes includes the setting of targets—often a minimum of five to ten books per year. The targets specify dates that reading responses are due. Ideally, students will voluntarily read beyond the minimum targets.

Each personal-response assignment in this book includes the requirement that students report on reading completed; e.g., the entire book.

Selection criteria for best responses should be negotiated in class.

Each personal-response assignment in this book includes the requirement that students report on reading completed; e.g., the entire book.

Reading Targets and Contests

A school's independent reading program sometimes includes the setting of targets—often a minimum of five to ten books per year. The targets specify dates that reading responses are due. Ideally, students will voluntarily read beyond the minimum targets.

Each personal-response assignment in this book includes the requirement that students report on reading completed; e.g., the entire book, at least half of the book, less than half of the book, little or none of the book. Consider whether students will complete responses for books that they have not read entirely. If they have not completely read the book by the date on which a response is due, you might challenge them to do so by the next due date. You might suggest that students complete a response based on a partial reading of the text and then move on to another book that might be more motivational. As a feature of differentiated instruction, set different reading targets for different students.

It is a good idea to provide a reading folder for each student. The folder will contain reading surveys completed by the students throughout the year, as well as the students responses to independent reading. A few times during the year, challenge students to review the collection to select what they think is their best response, with a page attached to explain their choice. Encourage students to identify a personal reading goal as part of the assessment. With their own and parents' permission, students share responses in classroom displays and presentations. Such sharing motivates other students to read the book and illustrates possibilities for thoughtful reading responses.

Be wary of contests as part of independent reading programs. Schools that employ prizes, such as pizza, hockey cards, and merchandise, suggest that reading is a chore that is good for you but requires an extrinsic reward. While contests and prizes might motivate students to develop a love of reading, often the reading ends at the end of the contest. Instead, emphasize that reading is enjoyable and personally important; therefore, reading is its own reward and often is a better entertainment option than a prize item.